Van Gogh's Sunflowers back on display after oil protesters threw soup on it

Two climate protesters broke into the National Gallery in London. They are said to have thrown tomato soup according to the surveillance video on a famous painting of Van Gogh.

The same video shows a protester shouting "art or life?"

Are you more concerned about protecting the paintings or protecting our planet and our citizens?"

Van Gogh's painting of flowers remained unscathed.

Thousands of protesters have taken to the streets of Tunisia's capital to demonstrate against the president.

This Saturday, demonstrations were held in Tunisia by deeply opposed political movements to each other. They accuse Kais Saied of attempting to turn Tunisia back into an autocracy. They are afraid that there won't be any future in Tunisia with Saied leading of the country. Demonstrators want Kais Saied to leave.

James Webb telescope solves dusty star mystery

This picture shows WR (Wolf-Rayet) 140. It's a double star system.

This picture was taken by the new super space telescope James Webb. WR 140 is far 5000 light years away from Earth. Its rings are dust shells and it extends over 10 trillion km which is about 70 000 times the distance Earth-Sun.

The James Webb Space Telescope spied the earliest born stars yet seen

A team of researchers of the University of Toronto were intrigued when they noticed global clusters, "the sparkles" (groups of stars that were born at the same time) hidden behind a galaxy in the first images of the James Webb space telescope. They believe studying these clusters is key to understanding the formation of galaxies since these stars were born during Cosmic Dawn.

Here's my plan for growth, Liz Truss: rejoin the EU and let its citizens work here

Liz Truss and Quasi Quarteng, are said to go on to "Hit the Ground Running", after this catastrophic start to the mandate. She will have to rebuild England which is 'economically' destroyed after Brexit and the past problems with the pound. Over 87% of respondents admit that Brexit has influenced this economic trend. Lowering the tax rate is not going to be a quick fix, but rather a backward step towards Europe.
