The Science Nobel Winners Were Short And Fast

The Nobel Prizes in Physics and Chemistry have recently highlighted the incredible world of the extremely small, reminding us of our disconnect from the vastness of the universe. Physics laureates focused on generating ultra-fast laser pulses to study electrons in chemical reactions, while chemistry laureates explored quantum dots – tiny atom clusters. These awards underscored our limited perspective in understanding the microscopic world. Despite our fascination with cosmic scales, the quantum realm operates in fractions of a nanometer and attoseconds, where countless reactions occur within our bodies. While we're seemingly impervious to quantum uncertainty, we remain rooted in the middle of cosmic scales, between the vast universe and the quantum limits defined by Max Planck. Science may continue its journey into inner space as it reaches for the stars, uncovering the fascinating microcosm within our own bodies.

Biden's dog Commander leaves White House after biting incidents

The Biden family's dog, Commander, had to leave the White House because he kept biting people, including a Secret Service agent. They are not sure where he will live next. This happened 11 times, and some reports say there were more incidents. Another Biden dog, Major, had similar issues last year and was sent to live with friends.

Bronze medals for Casha, Tabone at Ping Pong Parkinson World Championships

While everyone is focused on the Rugby World Cup, it's also important to talk about events like the Ping Pong Parkinson World Championships. This competition, often overlooked, highlights the therapeutic power of table tennis for those living with Parkinson's. It reminds us that sports can help people who are facing difficult situations find hope, strength, and a sense of community.

A small event which attracts more and more people every year.

OPEN Unveils Two Seafront Cultural Buildings in Yantai, China

Two cultural buildings located on the coastal line of China and Yantai have just been revealed by OPEN Architects.

The first one, called 'The Space Cristal', is a futuristic museum, While the second one named 'Sea Square' is a library.

As OPEN Architects have already made many buildings related, they really involved themselves to present us two thoughtful buildings.
