SpaceX launches Super Heavy-Starship rocket on third test flight

On Thursday, Elon Musk's SpaceX company launched its prototype for a new heavy rocket into space for the first time: Starship.

This spacecraft will serve as a human landing system for Nasa's Artemis lunar program. However, the rocket is in need of further modification, as although lift-off went well, Starship exploded after entering the atmosphere...

A forever war, more repression, Putin for life? Russia's bleak post-election outlook

This weekend saw the first round of the Russian presidential elections, which pitted current president Vladimir Putin against three other opponents. This election is the first since the start of the war in Ukraine but also the first since an amendment allowing him to stand for a fifth term was approved by referendum in 2020. The results, which are expected to be announced this week, will create huge suspense as to who the next Russian president will be.

'Inclusivity shouldn't be controversial': will a radical art rehang give Cambridge an unwanted 'woke' row?

The Fitzwilliam Museum in Cambridge has reopened its main painting galleries filled with paintings made by women artists and artists of colour.

Luke Syson, the director of the museum, is hoping that this new inclusive exhibition will be an enriching experience for its visitors. However, it has been judged as "preachy" and "fundamentally dull" by art critics.
