Sue Nelson : Talking to the moon: The quest to establish lunar wi-fi

The Apollo 11 mission recorded poor quality image. Today, no one can accept this resolution.

For the US's first soft landing on the moon in 50 years, engineers confirm that we will have access to 4K images in real time.

NASA wants to study how our 4G and 5G will perform on the moon. it's difficult because they want to establish their base in the Shackleton crater (bigger than Manhattan) and regolith can affect the wireless transmissions.

From this crater, a signal to earth can be perturbed by the terrain : this phenomenon is called "multipath".

The IM-2 mission will be the first mission when the rover is connected with the spaceship
